EDITORIAL.

The United States supreme court has affirmed the Leo Frank case, thus refusing to shift the crime upon the head of an innocent Negro whom Frank attempted to involve in his defense.

It is not only the so-called middle class of our people who submit without protest to galling discriminations on account of race. The so-called leaders are also found patronizing the alley entrances of theaters and roosting upon the far back seats.

It is said that the girls' social clubs whose funds have been employed toward the entertainment of their men friends are beginning to realize the poverty of their investments. It often happens, they say, that after a girl has put into an affair her hard earned pennies she has to attend the party alone, and sometimes spend most of the evening on the wall, the "boys" not even asking her for a dance. As a rule in such cases as these the "boys" are just what the "girls" allow them to be.

While no one would detract from the high purposes and aims of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People nor dispute the fact that it is doing a great deal of good in its unselfish mission, yet some of its claims for glory are greatly overdrawn.

In reading the report of the Kansas City branch in the fifth annual report we note some of these claims at close range. It is set forth that the local branch prevented segregation and jim-crow street cars, while as a matter of fact it did nothing of the sort, neither of these evils having been threatened. It claims to have saved Garrison Square to the colored people, while as a matter of fact there was never any great danger of its being lost, and such work as was necessary was done by the Negro citizens generally and without any special aid from the association.

The most laughable claim made by the local forces is that the yuccessfully fought state bills against intermarriage, while as a matter of fact such laws have existed for years in Missouri and there has not during the last decade been any new agitation upon the subject. There was a little stir upon the last named subject made by a frenzied member of the Kansas legislature, but he was quietly squelched by members of his own race who probably never heard of the N. A. A. C. P.

Lost Nickel in a Mill Race.

A wealthy mill owner in a small town on the Wabash river, whose plant was operated by power derived from the waters of the river, several years ago accidentally dropped a nickel in the mill race. This man actually had his employees close the headgates of the race in order to secure his nickel after the water had settled itself into the river.

ON VERMIN.

Among the many kinds of pests to which humanity is subjected, vermin are perhaps the most common and all-pervading. Wherever human beings live or congregate, there, as a rule, will be found vermin of some sort or other. Even the homes of the rich are not free from rats and mice that have their runways in the basement and from which they have every access to the rooms above. Cockroaches and water bugs, though not so numerous, are as much at home in the kitchen of the dwellers on the boulevards as they are in the poor homes of tenement dwellers, or in the paste jars of the downtown offices.

Then there is the unspeakable bedbug, the terror of housewives, and whose unwelcome presence is often noticed when least expected. These dreaded foes to household peace and comfort, so secretive and elusive in their habits, are a veritable scourge to a household when once they have infested it.

At this season of the year, when there is much moving and changing of living quarters, the problem of vermin becomes a pertinent one. Fortunately, indeed, are those families who find few or no vermin in their new quarters. Those who are less fortunate should immediately begin a war of extermination upon these pests, not only because their mere presence is obnoxious, but because they may be carriers of disease from the family which was their former host.

General cleanliness and eternal vigilance is the best preventive of vermin. Commercial exterminating preparations are many. Some of them are good, more are of doubtful value. Turpentine will kill bedbugs and destroy their eggs, but it leaves a disagreeable odor which remains for days. Sulphur fumigation kills the bugs but not the eggs. Gasoline will destroy both the eggs and bugs but it should never be used at night when gas or oil lamps are used for lighting. A small bottle of gasoline will evaporate gas enough to blow up a house. Corrosive sublimate or bichloride of mercury also destroys the bugs and eggs, but it is dangerous to have around where children can get it, as it is a violent poison. Black flag or pyrethrum powder is an effective insecticide for bugs, flies, mosquitoes, water bugs and roaches.

Mosquitoes and flies are recognized carriers of certain infectious diseases. For this reason we should seek not only to keep them from the house but also to destroy, as far as possible, the places where they breed. As is well known, stagnant pools, cesspools, rain barrels and low lying moist grounds are breeding places for mosquitoes. Flies breed mainly in manure piles, garbage cans and dumps. The abolition, then, of the places and conditions under which they are propagated will mean their extermination.

The house fly is one of the most troublesome as well as the most dangerous of insects. He delights in filth of every kind and character. But it is our misfortune that he has also an equal delight for sampling all the good things we eat. This is why he is so dangerous. He will leave his feast on the carcass of a dog to sail into our dining room and help himself to the butter, milk, cake, fruits, or whatever there is on the table that his palate.

The time has not yet come when all the breeding places for the house fly can be exterminated, and until this can be accomplished let us protect our homes by carefully screening all doors and windows. Let us be sure, also, that we get screens early before "fly time" arrives.

Zion Baptist church last Wednesday afternoon to pay the last tribute of respect to Mrs. Elmer Alex, who died April 12 after a lingering illness. The services conducted by Rev. Tally were of an extremely simple and exalted character. She leaves to mourn her loss a husband, daughter, other relatives and a host of friends.

M. club has proven to be one of the little social systems. The Home Talent minstrel, under the management of Mr. Victor Alex, entertained a large audience at the Majestic theater Wednesday night.
